

Naming racism is a critical first step in the process of anti-racism. It is a process that involves identifying and naming the ways in which racism is embedded in our society, culture, and institutions. This process is essential for understanding the root causes of racism and for developing effective strategies to address it. The following are three key elements of this process:

- 1) Identifying the ways in which racism is embedded in our society, culture, and institutions.
- 2) Naming the ways in which racism is embedded in our society, culture, and institutions.
- 3) Developing strategies to address racism.

For these reasons, it is essential that we name racism as a critical first step in the process of anti-racism.

SETTING THE AGENDA FOR ANTI-RACISM

The American Public Health Association (APHA) has set the agenda for anti-racism in the 2015-2016, International Conference on Critical Race Theory (APHA 2015).^{1,2} I believe that this agenda is essential for understanding the root causes of racism and for developing effective strategies to address it. The following are three key elements of this agenda:

- 1) Identifying the ways in which racism is embedded in our society, culture, and institutions.
- 2) Naming the ways in which racism is embedded in our society, culture, and institutions.
- 3) Developing strategies to address racism.

For these reasons, it is essential that we name racism as a critical first step in the process of anti-racism.

- 1) Identifying the ways in which racism is embedded in our society, culture, and institutions.
- 2) Naming the ways in which racism is embedded in our society, culture, and institutions.
- 3) Developing strategies to address racism.

For these reasons, it is essential that we name racism as a critical first step in the process of anti-racism.
