

Ex Libris

Photo: Jennie Thomas

In the first week of March, the Class of 2021, accompanied by Jennie Thomas and Fr. Keenan, S.J, completed their inaugural class trip: a travel seminar to Venice, Italy. The trip, overflowing with Venetian art, history, and culture, exposed the Scholars to a foreign language experience early in their academic careers. This tour of Venice not only strongly positioned the freshmen for future travel abroad, but also had the side-effect of bringing the youngest GPSP class together as a cohort. Venice was the perfect stage for a trip like this. In many ways a museum on a lagoon, the city in Northeast Italy is comprised of about a hundred church-studded islands connected by arching footbridges. The city's might as a republic peaked around the time of the Italian Renaissance and resulted in an identity unique in its aesthetic style and mix of cultures. The rich history of the city unfolded for the scholars as they walked from island to island, with the story of Venice well explained by Fr. Keenan, whose time spent living in Italy resulted in a remarkable command of all knowledge Venetian. On Monday March 5th, the freshmen settled in for a red-eye fight from Boston to Frankfurt, Germany. Late in the morning on Tuesday, the Scholars arrived in Venice, with their excitement compensating for any effects of jet lag or sleep deprivation. The group arrived at their place of stay for the week, the Centro Spirituale e Case di Riposo in the Cannaregio neighborhood. The building was at one time the palace of a prominent Venetian family, but has since become a convent. The

GPSP Alumni Spotlight.....	p.5
2019 SSJP Article.....	p.6
Class of 2020 Nicaragua....	p.7

nuns warmly greeted the

For some, the first few days of February are a slow-moving time of the semester, but, for the Presidential Scholars, this short period couldn't be more exciting. The first week of February marks the Gabelli Presidential Scholars Program Selection Process, affectionately known as GPSPSP. Every year, the top 55 students from Boston College's early action applicant pool are invited to BC as candidates for the GPSP. Over the course of four days, the prospective Scholars (lovingly dubbed "prospies") partake in a myriad of interviews, lunches, seminars, group conversations, and activities, each of which is designed not only to provide the Program directors with insight on each student, but also to introduce each student to the GPSP,

B ? lunches, stu butbutstudent
& only , f nv ed dui dui

provide each nw dui dui but but
dui ei
only conhk but

provid

each each , Mbut # d eachseminar nua only s/ butr s/ buts/ but m , Mbut s/ buts/ but ] s/ but i but s/ buts/ but s/ but s/ but s/ but s/ but ] s/ but butm s/ buts/ but s/ but s/ but
s/ but s/ but Mbut but s/ but s/ but

After months of brainstorming and planning, the sophomore class of the Gabelli Presidential Scholars Program hosted an educational and captivating panel to raise awareness on the issue of human trafficking. “A Price on Life: Slavery in the 21st Century” gave Boston College students and professors a glimpse into the discussion on the complex realities of human trafficking in Boston. Held in November, this sobering and illuminating conversation was focused on sex and labor trafficking featuring survivor and advocate Jasmine Marino, from Greater Boston; Medical and Executive Director of Massachusetts General Hospital’s Freedom Clinic, Wendy Macias-Konstantopoulos; Director of BC’s Immigrant Integration Lab, Westy Egmont; and the Chief of the Massachusetts Attorney General’s Human Trafficking Division, Elizabeth Keeley. Each of these eloquent guests provided the audience with different perspectives and a deeper understanding of trafficking and what they could do to help. Though human trafficking may seem like an issue that only plagues less developed countries, the sophomore class and their guests made sure to expose the ubiquity of a problem that affects men and women of any socioeconomic background or community.

Attendees were particularly moved by the insightful remarks of the Jasmine Marino and her journey to help others facing similar circumstances. The sophomore class partnered with the Center for Human Rights and International Justice, the Women’s Center, the Women’s and Gender Studies Program, the School of Theology and Ministry, the Church in the 21st Century, and the Theology Department to create this event. Students and faculty anticipate an opportunity to deepen their knowledge of this issue at a second installment of this human trafficking awareness campaign in the spring.

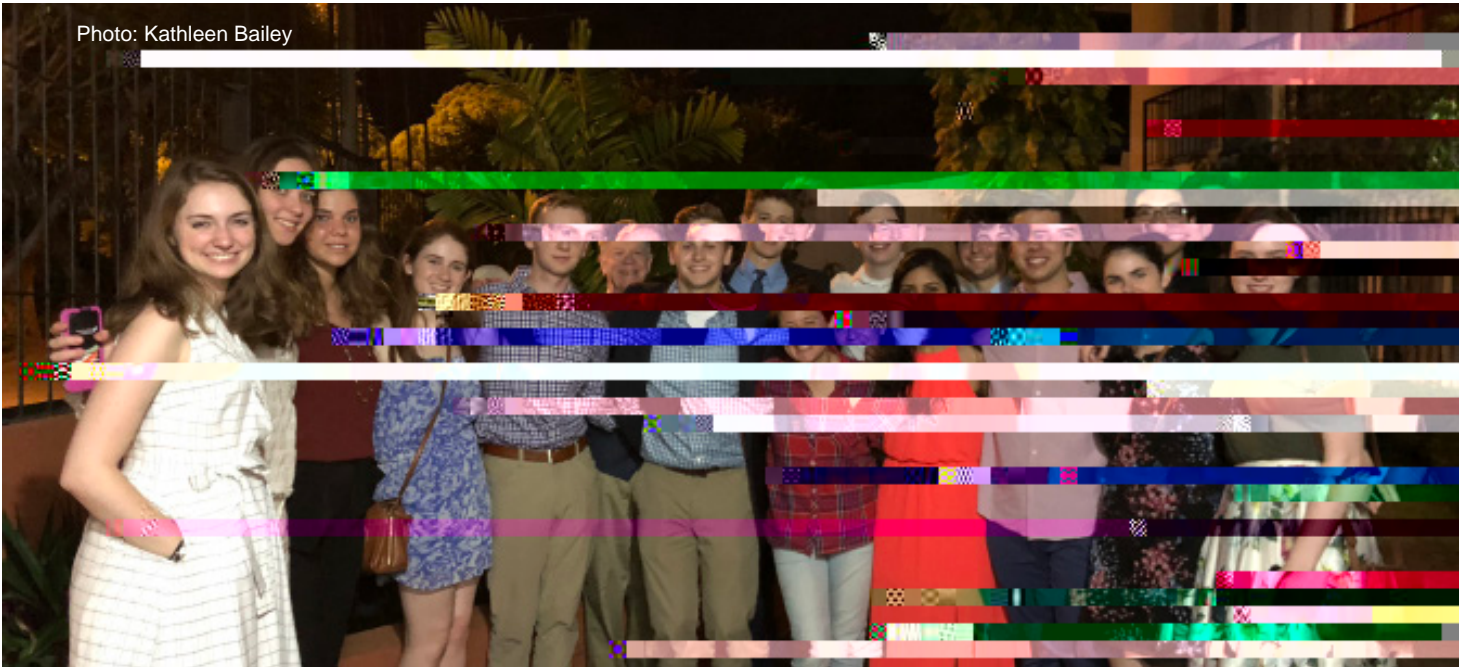

Photo: Shaan Bijwadia

Tate Krasner '16, far left, returned to campus to Moderate the event. Tate currently works as an analyst in the Human Trafficking Response Unit of the New York District Attorney’s Office.

Photo: Kathleen Bailey

Reinvigorated by a few relaxing weeks away from campus, on January 7th, the GPSP Class of 2020, along with co-directors Fr. Jim Keenan and Professor Kathy Bailey, spent an informative and reflective week in Managua, Nicaragua-- a trip saturated with the realities of third-world poverty, a frustrating political system, and, above all, inspiring encounters with the hope and dedication emanating from members of groups dealing with significant challenges.

The week began with an engaging lesson in history from Mark Lester of the Center for Global Education, who summarized the recent history of Nicaragua, highlighting U.S. involvement in Nicaraguan politics and the recent changes in political power. The Scholars, who had been familiarized with certain details of the revolution by reading Fr. Fernando Cardenal's Faith and Joy, came to realize the lasting presence of the issues left behind by the revolution, particularly regarding the current President Daniel Ortega. This meeting set the stage for the remainder of the trip.

Following lunch at CGEE, the sophomores met with María Teresa Blandón and spoke (aided by their translator and guide, the warm and uplifting Elisa Vanegas) about the history and continuing struggles of the feminist movement in Nicaragua. María Teresa's strength, dedication, sense of humor, and experience made for an engaging and enlightening address.

The next day, following a tour of the downtown where the group encountered historic landmarks such as the Plaza de la Revolución, known for its role in the Sandinista Revolution, the sophomores enjoyed mid-morning crepes at Pastelería Margarita. They met with Silvia Nadine, a member of the Movimiento Renovador Sandinista (MRS), a political party vying for a position in the Nicaraguan government. Despite the setbacks faced in recent years by the MRS and Nicaraguan democracy as a whole, Silvia's unwavering determination was inspiring.

Later, the trip took a different turn, as the group met with Silvia Cisneros, a nurse belonging to the Acahualinca Women's Center. The center, despite the battle for funding and resources, has improved the lives of women in one of the poorest parts of Managua through education, medical care, and counseling.

On Wednesday, the students toured a factory in a free trade zone and observed workers on the production line after meeting with members of the factory's management. This was followed by a trip to the American Chamber of Commerce, where development policies and foreign investment in Nicaragua were discussed.

On Thursday, the group attended a meeting of the organization Pro Mujer, an organization helping entrepreneurial women start small businesses in some of the poorest parts of Managua. Soon after, the students met with Carlos Mendez of the Humboldt Center and learned of the struggles faced by Nicaragua concerning climate change and the lack of governmental support for research and mitigation efforts.

The group concluded their day by received a Fulbright combined research scholarship to Vienna, Austria to study refugee integration policies.

was awarded the National Science Foundation Graduate Research Fellowship was successful in applying for an Individual F30 Fellowship from the NIH for full support of his MD/PhD training at UC San Diego. Also - this year, he will be funded by a travel grant from the Knights Templar Eye Foundation to present his ongoing thesis research at the annual meeting for the Association for Research in Vision and Ophthalmology in Honolulu, HI.

got married on April 7th to Kyle Hawkins, and is now Associate General Counsel at Hennessy Advisors, Inc. in was recently awarded tenure and is now Professor of Law and Martin Luther King, Jr. Hall Research Scholar, at UC Davis School of Law.

Austin, TX

122 College Road Chestn t Hill, MA 02467

GABRIEL'S MEMORIAL
SCHOLARS PROGRAM